The mourant stars appear, And, like will ction's tear, ne, though none be near To prize their light,

The gamity tolips sleep; The heavens o'er them weep Drops from that agare deep Where off we gure.

The bleeding heart droops low. is violet's tear drops gloss; And swaying to and fro Narcissus grieves.

Hast thon forgotten me, Whose spirit yearns for thee? So fast earth's friendships fice, We live in wee.

Oring of virgin gold! Have ye to him grown old-Ains, so soon? of thus life's morning bloom Is marred by sorrow's gloom.

O love! once fondly rold!

O what must be the doons Of future years? But numbered soon life's sands; All hushed the heart's dermi

And, folding weary hamls I'll sleep at last. Nor feel the cold cartle's chill, Nor love's magnetic thrill,

No luman good or ill Shall wake me more SALEM, April 17th, 1872. CONSTANCE
